Question 1

3D movies are everywhere, and theme parks even have 4D or 5D movies. A new cinema company follows the trend and builds a new, super-dimensional movie theatre, with as many dimensions as every movie needs! Today we will see the awesome Sci-Fi blockbuster:

"The Attack of the Word Embeddings"

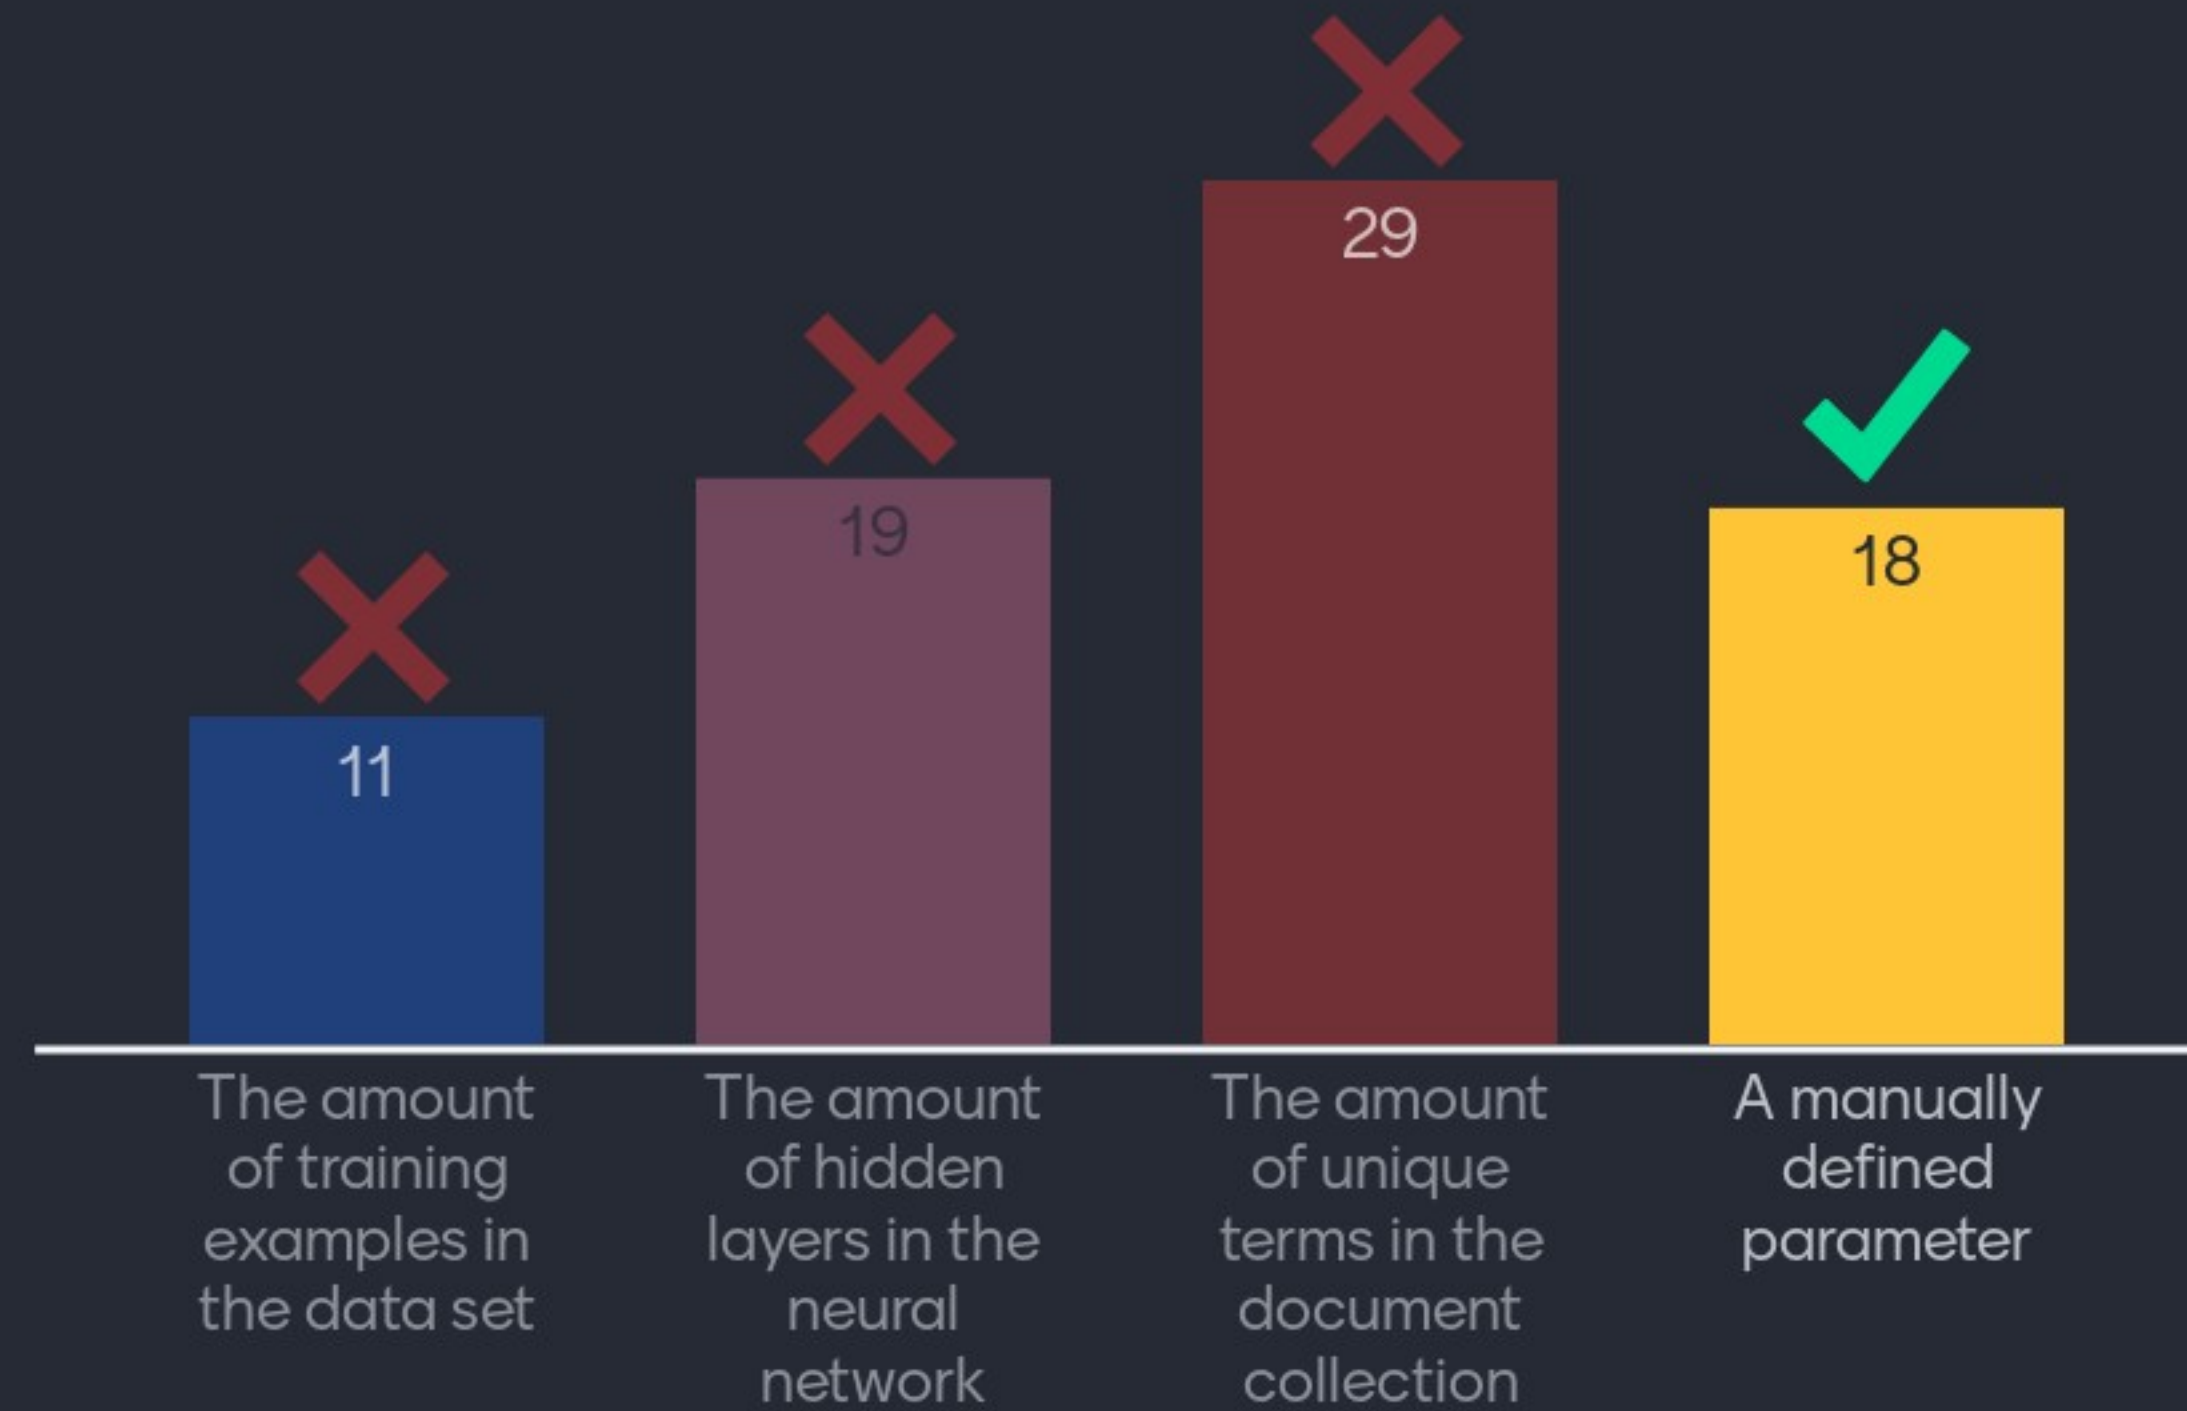

What determines how many dimensions this movie needs?

(What determines the dimensions of Word Embedding vectors?)

Question 2

The NLP community wants to recruit new, young researchers. For this purpose, they team up with Disney (TM) to create an NLP-related, animated movie. The story writers have almost finished the plot, and Thomas Arnold will do the voice acting of the protagonist token. Only one thing is still missing: The theme song!

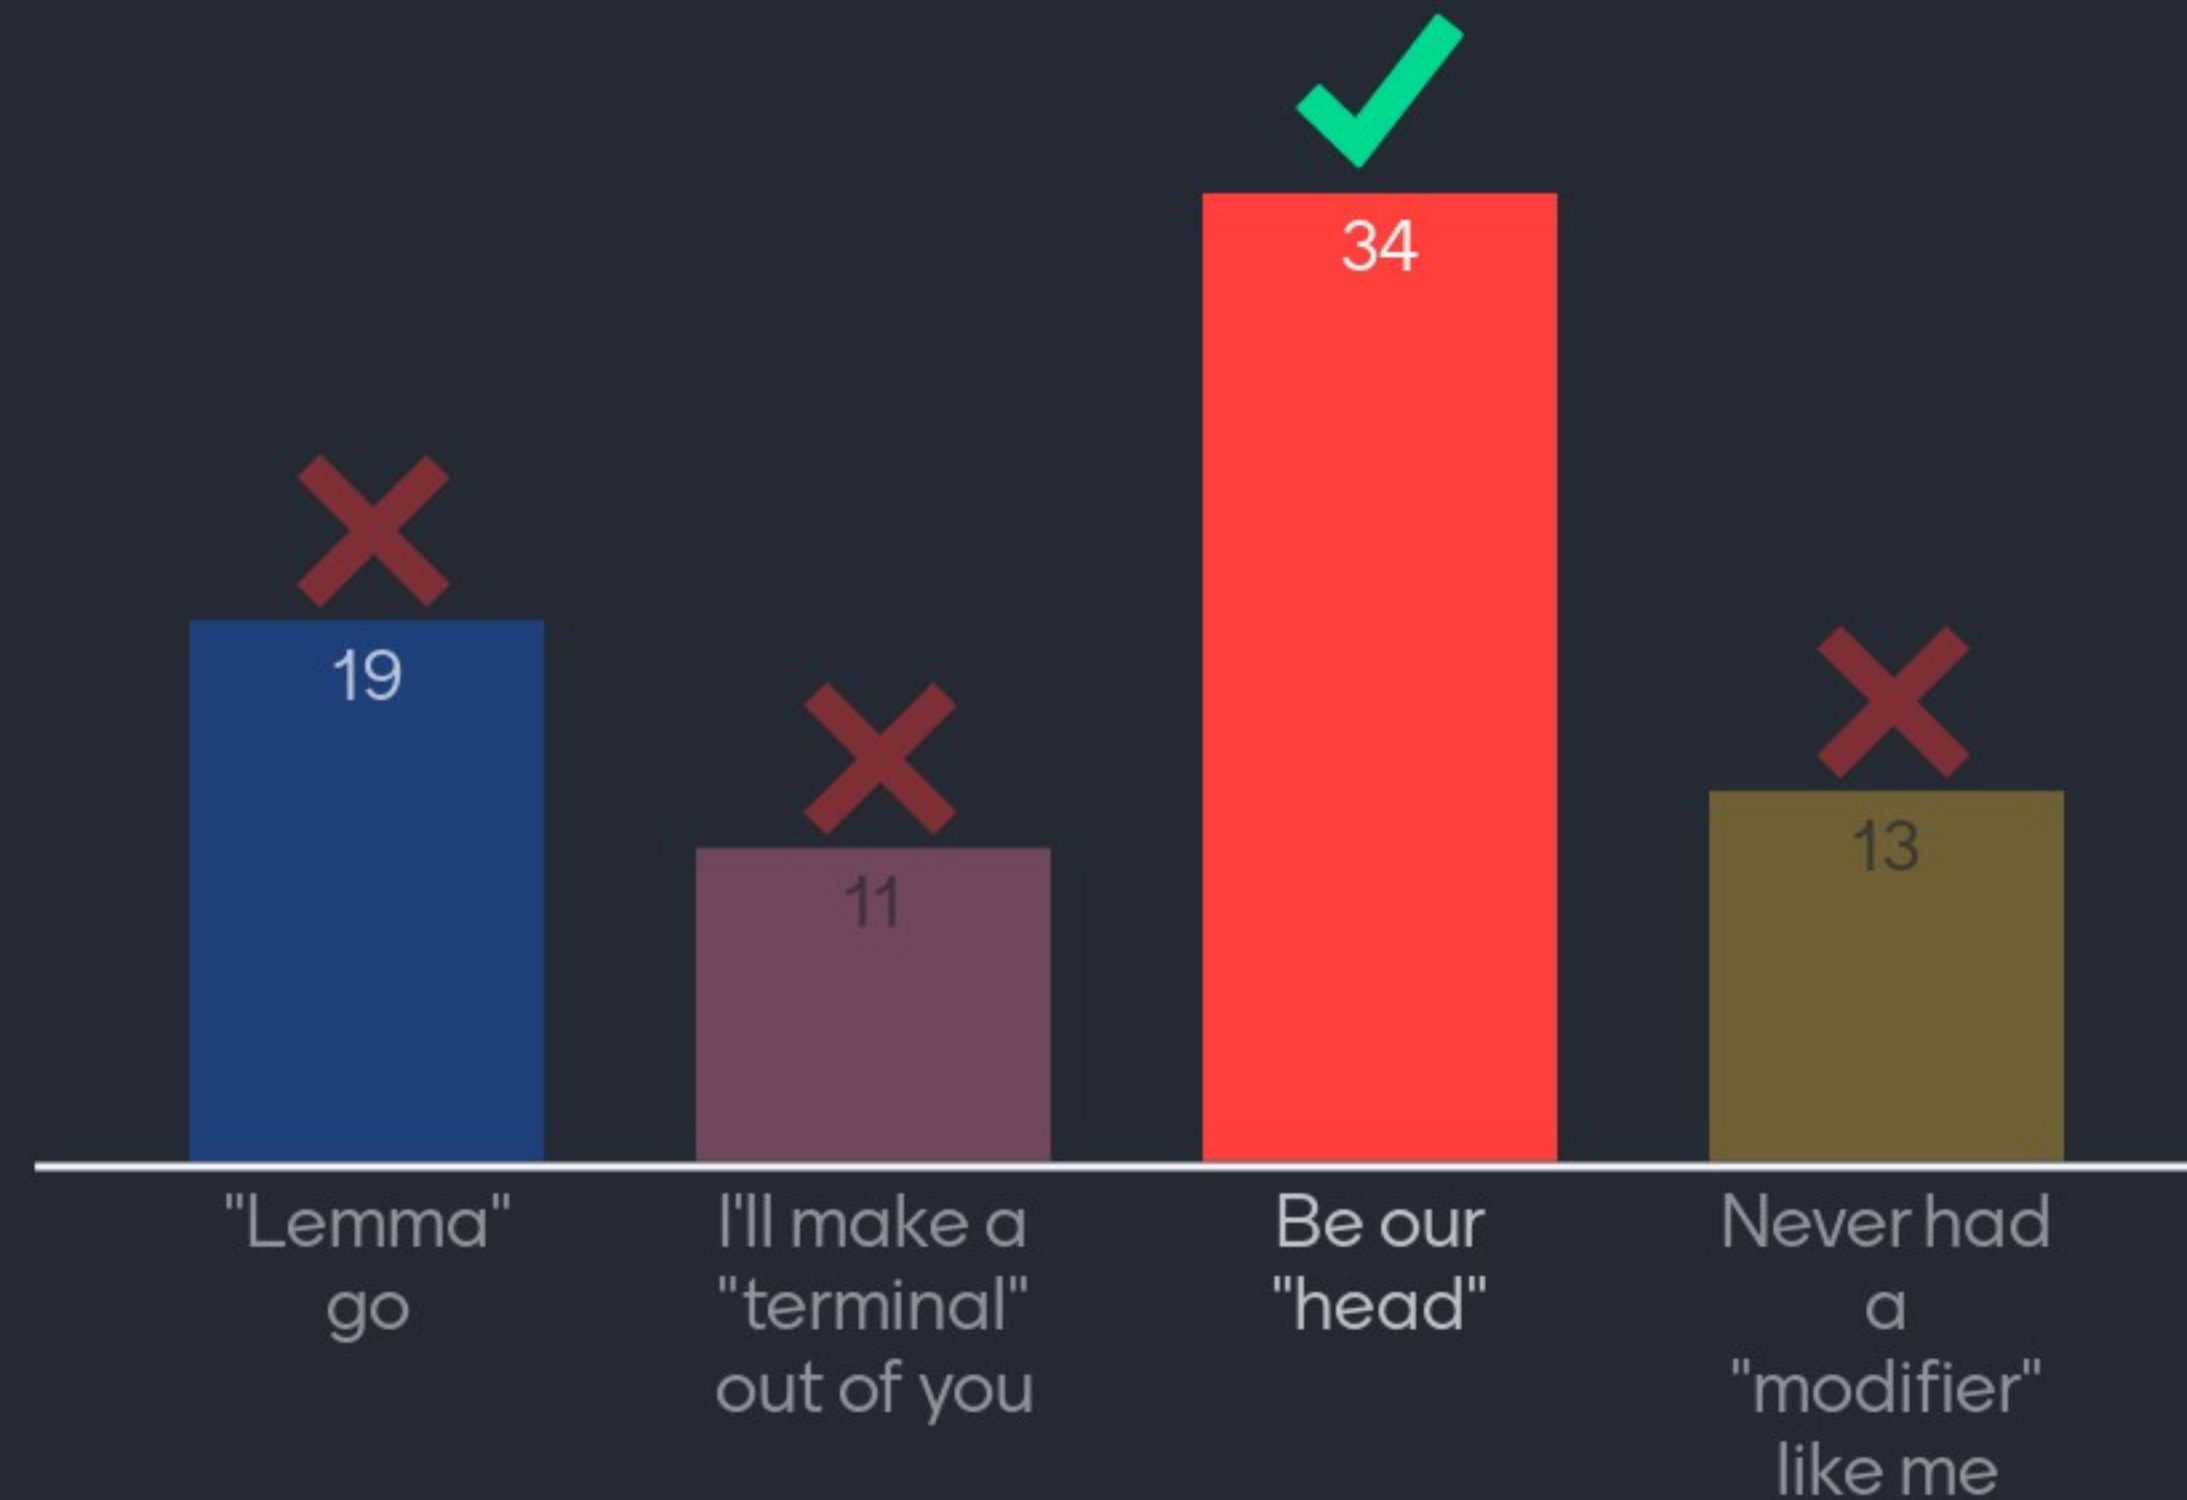

In the opening scene, a bunch of phrases sing about their search for the word that defines their syntactic type. What would be a good title for this song?

(Which song includes the word that defines the syntactic type of a phrase?)

Question 3

Finally - the day has come when you can fulfill your dream, join the mages guild, and become the most famous magician!

But first, you have to choose your profession. Sadly, you are too cool to be a pyromancer, too hot to be a cryomancer, and too rational to be a pi-o-mancer. You decide to join the guild as a prabability-mancer. Probably.

The initiation test looks pretty simple - the guild master shows you a table with some statistics of the local dungeon.

Then, he asks you the following question...

(Type your answer as a decimal number. You can use . (dot) or , (comma) if needed)
